Police Say Gunman Kills Three in Idaho Shooting Spree

(Reuters) A 29-year-old man killed three people and critically wounded another during a shooting spree in the northern Idaho city of Moscow on Saturday. Police later identified the shooter as John Lee, 29, of Moscow. Moscow Police Chief David Duke said that Lee is believed to have first killed his mother at her home before driving to an office building and shooting and killing his landlord, and wounding another man who was in the landlord's office. The suspect then fled and was pursued by police shortly after he was spotted just over the state border in Pullman, Washington. The chase ended when Lee crashed on an interstate highway and was arrested.

Radical Cleric Abu Hamza Jailed for Life by US Court

(BBC News) Radical Muslim cleric Abu Hamza al-Masri has been sentenced to life in prison by a court in New York for supporting terrorism. The cleric, who was born Mustafa Kamel Mustafa, was convicted last May in New York on 11 counts, including involvement in a plot to take Western tourists hostages in Yemen in 1998. Abu Hamza was also convicted of helping to set up a terrorist training camp in the US state of Oregon. Judge Katherine Forrest said she was sentencing him to life because she could not think of a time when it would be safe to release him, and she added that she would leave the decision where he would spend his imprisonment to federal prison officials.

Huge Crowds and Heavy Security Expected for Anti-terror Rally in Paris

(The New York Times) World leaders and hundreds of thousands of people were expected to join a rally and march here today under extraordinary security in a government-sponsored show of unity and defiance after a series of terrorist attacks. Prime Minister Manuel Valls declared on Saturday that France was at “war” with radical Islam after harrowing attacks that claimed 17 victims, plus three gunmen who said they were acting on behalf of Al Qaeda and other radical Islamist groups. The French government said it would mobilize 500 additional troops and hundreds more police officers to provide security at a rally designed to galvanize the shaken country.

Arsonists Attack German Paper That Published French Cartoons

(AP) Police in Germany say they have detained two men suspected of an arson attack against a newspaper that republished the cartoons of French weekly Charlie Hebdo. The newspaper Hamburger Morgenpost said on its website that the overnight arson attack destroyed several files in its archive, but did not injure anyone. The Hamburg tabloid newspaper published the Charlie Hebdo cartoons the day after the attack against the newspaper in Paris to express its solidarity with the slain journalists. Several other national and local German newspapers also published the cartoons and they are now getting police protection.

Official: Islamic State group battle in Iraq kills 30 Kurds

(AP) An Iraqi military spokesman says 30 members of the Kurdish peshmerga have been killed during a battle with Islamic State group militants in the country's north. Halgurd Hekmat, spokesman for the Iraqi Kurdish force in Irbil, told The Associated Press on Sunday that the clashes erupted Saturday when the extremists approached the town of Gwer outside the northern city of Mosul, which was held by the Islamic State group. Hekmat had information about casualties suffered by the Islamic State group. The Islamic State group captured Gwer as part of its blitz across northern and western Iraq this past summer, but it was taken by the peshmerga in August.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

A weak weather system will pass over the Pacific Northwest today and may bring some light rain to Northwest California late this afternoon and tonight. A ridge aloft will rebuild Monday for a return of dry weather which will last through midweek. Late in the week there is a better chance for rain.

Medford Weather:

Precipitation ahead of a cold front moves into the coastal waters this morning and showers will taper off behind the front tonight as the jet axis exits stage right. Snow levels drop to a little above the Cascade Pass levels with a meager addition to the snow pack by Monday morning. Showers will continue to slowly taper off during the day Monday. By Tuesday morning, weak offshore flow develops across the region with fog deepening in the west side valleys in the mornings again through Wednesday.

Reno Weather:

Low pressure near the West Coast will lead to a few light showers today. A cold front will move across Northern Nevada tonight and tomorrow with the best chance for rain and snow showers north of Truckee to Fallon Line.

San Francisco Weather:

A weak weather system may produce isolated light showers across far southern Monterey County this morning. Otherwise, partly cloudy and dry weather is forecast today. High pressure will gradually build over California from late today through Tuesday and maintain a dry weather pattern through at least the middle of the week. Rain could potentially develop across the North Bay as early as Thursday night. Rain chances will increase and become more widespread by next weekend.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY

Sacramento Weather:

A couple of weak weather systems may bring a few light showers mainly over the mountains today and Monday. Fair weather is expected Tuesday through Thursday with more widespread precipitation possible on Friday into the weekend.

Hanford Weather:

A storm system will continue to impact Southern California bringing rain showers as far north as Tulare County. Additionally, snow showers will be possible over the Sierra Crest generally above 7500 feet. These showers will continue into the early afternoon hours. Otherwise, dry and mild weather will take hold of the region on Monday and continue through the work week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

A slow moving low pressure system will bring periods of rain through this morning with showers becoming less widespread during the afternoon. Dry weather is expected by Monday as low pressure moves east. Mostly clear skies and warmer weather will follow for the remainder of the week as surface high pressure builds into the Great Basin and offshore flow develops.

Extreme Southwestern California Including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

A weak low pressure system will move inland through Southern California bringing periods of showers with light to locally moderate rainfall amounts today, and then decreasing this evening. Dry conditions forecast on Monday. For Tuesday through Thursday, high pressure aloft near the West Coast and surface high pressure over the Great Basin will bring a warming trend with periods of gusty northeast winds, the strongest on Wednesday. Onshore flow will return late in the week with slow cooling and a return of night and morning coastal low clouds and fog.

Southeast California Weather:

Unsettled weather will continue through the early part of this week as a series of fast moving troughs continue to move through the Desert Southwest. Showers will once again be possible late tonight into Monday morning, followed by a slight chance again early Tuesday. High pressure will return to the area by midweek with dry weather and slowly increasing temperatures expected from Wednesday into next weekend.
